*Back in the void behind us,
As cycle on cycle
Much of the story is hidden—
The tale of primal things.
The tale of a vast endeavor,
Led by a dream of old,
When a man is a man forever,
And gold is only gold.*

And one there stood in history's early dawn,
The Spartan bold who held the imperilled pass,
Who met the whelming foeman brawn with brawn,
Who weakened not at odds . . . Leonidas.
Denied the aid of those for whom he fought;
Betrayed by those whose only aim was power;
Welcomed the loyal help Platæa brought—
He kept the faith in that far distant hour.

At Runnymede upon that fallow land,
The chart of human freedom was unrolled,
The dream of ages spurred that winning band;
The deeds of martyrs made their claims more bold;
They made a castle of the humble cot
That none could enter even though the King;
They made the bondman easier in his lot;
They leveled belted earl and underling.

Then Washington whose quenchless patriot fire,
Led on through all the dark and hidden ways,
Whose every act was bred by that desire
To win for others Freedom's happy days.
Uncrowned he wore the greatest crown of all,
The crown that finds repose within the heart.
Content to heed alone his country's call,
Refused its gifts and chose a humble part.

Great Marshall heralded the rising State,
He sounded out the trumpet of the Law;
Interpreted the scroll of Freedom's fate,
Upheld the right and majesty of law;

Gave us the wise decrees that must prevail
If we throughout the ages would endure
Taught us the principles that will not fail;
Welded in words the commonweal secure.

Then Lincoln came of sober, thoughtful mien;
Re-knit for us the tangled threads of state;
Rebuilt in our hearts the ancient dream;
Unfolded to our eyes the will of fate,
Told us in clarion words that winging sped

Down the vast future to the uttermost,
That liberty and freedom are not dead:
Gave us his life and counted not the cost.

And when the whirlwind of the nations' greed,
Shook the whole world and held men's souls in awe,
When men believed that boundless was the need
Of steel and iron, and sword their only law.

Then rising upward from a poppy sea,
The torch of freedom flamed from out the west,
The hosts that followed Washington and Lee,
Now marched again at Liberty's behest.

And now today, as Freedom's fire burns bright,
To us the heritors of that vast dream,
Is given all the blooming or the blight;
To breast the current of Life's swirling stream;
To hold aloft the flaming torch of Faith;
To seek for knowledge not beyond our ken;
To meet the perils of our upward path;
To meet and match the starker wills of men.

*Back in the void behind us,
As cycle on cycle swings,
Much of the story is hidden—
The tale of primal things.
We join in that vast endeavor,
Led by that dream of old:*
